More than a dozen people were thrown out of the last game for hurling objects into the crowd.

A large inflatable phallic object surfaced at Ross-Ade Saturday, angering some football patrons.

TOO ROWDY

An oversized phallic object is tossed around by the student section during Purdue's loss to Notre Dame last Saturday.

Police attempt to control unruly fan behavior at football games.

By Ben Steckler, Campus Editor

It's a Purdue football tradition.

Steve Simmerman, assistant athletics director for facilities and game management, said.

There's always been concern about objects being thrown at games and the injuries that can occur.

Morgan Burke, Intercollegiate Athletic Director