Matt Gomes didn’t expect to be bald this spring.
He had felt some pains after coming to Purdue in the fall, like there may be some kind of problem and one day in mid-October he was in so much pain he couldn’t walk.
The freshman in the College of Engineering went to a doctor to see if he had mono and was forwarded to an urologist. The diagnosis came at his first Homecoming weekend.
He didn’t expect to be diagnosed with testicular cancer.
Hundreds of miles away from his family and friends in Atlanta, Gomes went into the
